Purpose

The seminar will cover several important topics. Achieving timely permanency is a critical issue in child welfare cases. This year's seminar features two panels that will address this issue, one from the bench and one from the bar. Additionally, there is a great need for zealous representation of juveniles involved in delinquency cases, and a panel of experienced attorneys will offer their insights on the ethical duties surrounding that representation. This year's seminar also includes a presentation from the "Education Rights Counsel," an organization whose goal is to generate systemic change by equalizing access to advocacy and legal representation for under-resourced families with a focus on special education support and student discipline.
